A: I use this website to download all the latest versions: It's an online source for V.32.B and V.32.B-MULTI (ready to download) Q: How to save background data while using service component in react-native? I've built a custom tabs module in react native, and as far as I could tell there aren't any built-in solutions to save and retrieve data from the service. Below is my current implementation. 1) This component is supposed to run in the background, so I needed to: a. Save the state in a class variable. b. Use the instance variable to get data from the service when onAttach() was called (or onStateChange(?)). c. When the application is dismissed, or using the BackHandler, call onWillResignActive() and save the data in the default state. d. When the application is reloaded, call onDidBecomeActive() and load the data from the service. I'm new to using the service in react-native, so if my implementation is incorrect (I am), or the approach is not the right one, any help or advice would be helpful, thanks! class MyFirstTabs extends Component { static async getInitialState() { return { isLoading: true, tempData: null }; } // This function will run in the background, when the app becomes active, // i.e. when the user is tapping on the tab from the main menu, we will save the state. onDidBecomeActive() { const { tempData } = this.props.service.getData(); this.setState({ tempData }); // This function will run in the background, when the app becomes inactive, // i.e. when the
